SUPPLEMENTAL INFORMATION

FUND PERFORMANCE

The quarter ended on a positive note as November and December returns were upwardly sloped. This contrasts with the third quarter where domestic assets posted two consecutive negative months of returns.

In October and November there was some risk trimming as holdings of Thungela, Santam, Vodacom and Spar were pared back.

Nominal bonds were firmer through the quarter, trading up around 8 percent for the full quarter. The strength of the local bond market saw it compress the spread to US Treasuries at the benchmark 10-year mark to its lowest level in about 5 years. Although not quite as strong, inflation-linked bonds were up nicely, returning around 6 percent for the full quarter. The returns in inflation-linked bonds were more remarkable given that they were down close to a percent in October before rallying in November and December.

Cash was up about 2 percent for the quarter. For steady compounders, that is close to 8 percent annualised which is not shabby when considering that the All-Share index ended the year 7.8 percent up.
